The new group, called Representing Montgomery County Residents, was formed at the Commission on Local Government's meeting in Germantown on Dec. 5. According to the group's website, mission statements and other documents, the group will help Montgomery County residents address problems in government, including a lack of transparency in government, lack of responsive government and mismanagement. "The group is a statewide, national and regional issue," said Joanne Hopkins, director of the Community Law Enforcement Forum and chairwoman of Representing Montgomery County Residents. Representing Montgomery County Residents is made up of more than 40 community organizations, including the Environment, Planning and Economic Development Council, Washington Area Bicyclist Association, Montgomery County Planning Board and the Grange Hill Community Council. Representing Montgomery County Residents will seek to improve county governance and planning through citizen engagement. According to the group's website, its mandate is to improve decision-making and improve county government. "We need to be more responsive government," Hopkins said. "We are not having a good public process." Vacancies in the county board of supervisors are not advertised on the county's website; rather, the board of supervisors posts the positions and appoints individuals to fill the board's vacancies. The county's website also does not provide information about the board's hearings, she said. Additionally, representatives of the county government's agencies need to be more open to community members, Hopkins said. On average, a citizen complaint is resolved in nine months; however, the county processes complaints much more slowly, she said. The public shouldn't have to wait nine months to receive satisfactory feedback, she said. Representing Montgomery County Residents will also begin working to address the city of Gaithersburg's expansion, Hopkins said. "We are going to be a group that has a voice on the issue of Grange Hill and the relationship between the county and the city of Gaithersburg," she said. Representing Montgomery County Residents also is
